

First Fox

A big fox stands in the spring grass, Glossy in the sun, chestnut bright,
Plumb centre of the open meadow, a leaf
From a picture book.

Forepaws delicately nervous,
Thick brush on the grass
He rakes the air for the scent
Of the train rushing by,

My first fox,
Wiped from my eye,
In a moment of train-time.

From a picture b book.

- Alliteration – x and s making similar sounds
- Stands and grass echo one another because of the similar vowel sounds
- Nut and bright echo one another because they have the t sound at the end
- Open and book are linked words – the meadow is open like a book
- Why hasn't the poet used the word page. Is it because leaf is also to do with nature?
- Chestnut bright is a shortened simile – as bright as a chestnut...

Fox

After dark when the cars park and the streets are quiet Fox comes loping calmly over the wall.

He strolls
along the pavement and across the road
with his long nose, sharp ears
and his feathery brush of a tail, flows like water through the shadows and hard spaces.

He goes alone.
This is his place
these trails of smells, the bins and bags that are his pickings
the yards and parks, back alleys and the hollows under cars.
If we pass by he turns and with one look reminds us that we've only borrowed it.
